

Digital Marketing — RAG Practice Knowledge Base

A fictional training document created for testing PDF loading, chunking, retrieval, and question answering.

1. Digital Marketing Overview

Digital marketing is the promotion of products or services through digital channels such as search engines, websites, social media, email, and online advertising. A digital marketing strategy normally combines audience research, content, distribution, measurement, and optimization.

A basic campaign workflow can be described as: define the objective, identify the audience, select channels, create the offer and content, launch the campaign, measure results, and optimize based on performance data.

2. Search Engine Optimization (SEO)

SEO focuses on improving a website's visibility in unpaid search results. Common activities include keyword research, creating useful content, improving page titles and descriptions, internal linking, technical improvements, and earning relevant backlinks.

Important SEO measurements can include organic clicks, impressions, click-through rate, average search position, indexed pages, and conversions from organic traffic. A high number of impressions does not automatically mean that a page is generating many visitors or conversions.

3. Paid Advertising

Paid digital advertising allows businesses to reach selected audiences using platforms such as search and social advertising systems. Campaigns may be optimized for objectives including traffic, leads, sales, app installs, or awareness.

CPC means Cost Per Click and represents the amount paid for a click. CPM means Cost Per Mille and represents the cost for one thousand impressions. CTR, or Click-Through Rate, measures the percentage of impressions that resulted in clicks.

Metric	Meaning
CPC	Cost Per Click
CPM	Cost per 1,000 impressions
CTR	Percentage of impressions that generated clicks
CPL	Cost Per Lead
ROAS	Revenue generated relative to advertising spend

4. Social Media Marketing

Social media marketing uses platforms such as Instagram, Facebook, LinkedIn, and YouTube to distribute content, build awareness, generate engagement, and support business goals. Content can include short videos, images, carousels, educational posts, testimonials, and product demonstrations.

A content calendar helps organize topics, formats, publishing dates, and campaign themes. Performance can be reviewed using reach, views, engagement, saves, shares, clicks, leads, and conversions depending on the objective.

5. Email Marketing

Email marketing can be used for newsletters, product updates, offers, onboarding, and customer retention. A campaign may contain a subject line, message, call-to-action, and tracking links.

Useful measurements include open rate, click rate, unsubscribe rate, and conversions. Different audience segments can receive different messages based on their interests or previous actions.

6. Conversion and Analytics

A conversion is a desired action, such as submitting a lead form, making a purchase, booking a consultation, or signing up for a service. Conversion Rate is commonly calculated as conversions divided by relevant visits or clicks, multiplied by 100.

Example: if a landing page receives 1,000 visits and generates 40 leads, the lead conversion rate is 4%. Analytics should be used to identify where users drop off and which channels contribute to the business objective.

7. Campaign Example

A fictional furniture repair company launches a Google Search campaign with a daily budget of ■1,000. During one day it receives 50 clicks, 2,000 impressions, and 10 leads. The campaign can be evaluated using CTR, CPC, and cost per lead. If the business wants more leads, it can test search terms, ad copy, landing-page messaging, location targeting, and bidding strategy.
